My dear,

The great love I have hitherto expressed for you is false and I find my indifference towards you increases daily. The more I see of you the more you appear in my eyes an object of contempt. I feel myself every way disposed and determined to hate you. Believe me I never had an intention to offer you my hand. Our last conversation has left a tidious insipience which has by no means given me the most exalted idea of your character;

Your temper would make me extremely unhappy, and if we are united, I shall experience nothing but the hatred of my parents, added to everlasting displeasure in living with you. I have, indeed, a heart to bestow, but I donot desire you to imagine it at your service. I could not give it to anyone more inconsistent and capricious than yourself and not capable to do honour to my choice and to my family.

Yes, indeed, I hope you will be persuaded that I speak sincerely, and will do me a favour to avoid me. I shall excuse your taking the trouble to answer this. Your letters are always full of impertinence and you have not a shadow of good sense of wit. Adieu. Adieu. Believe me. My advice to you is that it is impossible for me, to be your most affectionate friend and humble servant.
